Priyadarshi Singh asks: These days I am going through the Rahu Antardasha in Jupiter Mahadasha. I Think I am facing the toughest time of my life in every field. Some astrologers have advised me to wear a Neelam and an Opal. Some others have suggested wearing a Khooni Neelam. I want to know whether it is okay and beneficial to wear these two gems or should I wear some other gemstones. My birth details are: Date- 21 july- 1979, Time- 20:30 Hrs, Place- Maunath Bhanjan, Uttar Pradesh, India.

Astrologer Ashutosh: You have correctly said that you are passing through the last three months of Rahu antardasha in the Mahadasha of Jupiter. You were born under a Kumbh (Aquarius) ascendant and a Mithun (Gemini) moon sign.

On 9th December 2012 you will enter Shani (Saturn) Mahadasha which will last for next nineteen years which will be a much more beneficial and stable period for you than the present Jupiter Mahadasha which has been going on since last sixteen years.

Your Saturn Mahadasha will take around three months to come into effect fully which means that you will begin to feel its positive effects in your professional and personal life from February 2013 onwards. Prior to that, in October 2012 itself, some changes will come in your life which will pave the way for the positive developments of the Saturn Mahadasha.

About the gemstones, my advice is that you should wear a White Sapphire for Venus instead of an Opal. Wear this gemstone within the first two weeks of December 2012. Avoid wearing a Khooni Neelam. Instead, you can wear a normal Neelam (Blue Sapphire) but only after testing it for its good or bad effects on you. This can be done within the month of December 2012. Wear the Blue Sapphire before 23rd December 2012 for best results.

Both these gemstones, white sapphire and the blue sapphire, must be worn only in silver rings or pendants. Do not wear them in gold. Remove all other gemstone rings or pendants which you are wearing.
