

Rakshak Asks: Dear Sir, I have been advised by a very qualified astrologer to wear a Neelam on my left hand and a Pukhraj (Yellow Sapphire) on my right hand. The confusion that I have is that presently I am under Shani Mahadasha and Guru Antardasha, but as jupiter is presently in transit in Taurus, in my horoscope's 12th house and there is a Shani-Rahu yuti in the 5th house should I wear a Yellow sapphire and a Neelam, or, only a Neelum will be fine for me? My birth date: 29.05.1979, Time: 8:00 am and Place: Indore, Madhya Pradesh, India.

Astrologer Ashutosh: In your natal horoscope Rahu-Saturn yuti is there in the third house and in the transit too the same yuti is has formed in the fifth house in Libra. You should test a Neelam before wearing it even though Saturn is a semi-yogakarak planet for you. Wearing it without testing it first may lead to some highly stressful and troubling results.

As Jupiter is not a yogakarak planet for you, and is a bhadhakadheesh in your horoscope, its gemstone will give initially good results but later on it will give equally bad results too. So, you should not wear a Pukhraj for Jupiter. Its hamrful transit in the twelfth house also does not allow wearing its gemstone.

My suggestion is that you should wear a gemstone for Venus which can be either a White Sapphire or an Opal. Wear the gem in a silver ring o the ring figer of the right hand on Friday at sunrise. Mercury is a yogakarak planet for you but its placement with Sun in the twelfth house gives me doubts about its gemstone's positive effects. It is better to leave it untouched and only a Neelam and a White Sappire (or an opal) should be good enough for you.
